N.Y. Exhibit To Mark 20th Anniversary Of Ghetto Uprising

Philip M. Klutznick, former ranking member of the United States delegation to the United Nations who has been appointed general chairman of the sponsors' committee of the exhibit commemorating the 20th anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising of the YIVO Institute for Jewish Research, announced that a comprehensive exhibit of pictures and documents, depicting the Nazi brutality, will be on view at the International headquarters of the YIVO Institute for Jewish Research at 4:00 P.M. April 21, at 1045, Fifth Avenue, New York, corner of Eighty-Sixth Street and Fifth Avenue.

Outdoor ceremonies will be held in front of the Institute's building. For the occasion, the entire block, between Fifth and Madison Avenue, will be blocked off.

In a special proclamation, President Kennedy paid strong tribute to the heroic resistance of the Jewish men, women, and children in their fight against overwhelming Nazi forces during the Warsaw Ghetto uprising, citing it "as an inspiration to the peace-loving people of the world and a warning to would-be oppressors which will long be remembered." His proclamation added:

"The surviving Jews, suffering from malnutrition and disease, with pitifully few weapons and virtually no hope of assistance from any source, determined to sell their lives as dearly as possible. They engaged the Nazis in battle. The result was known by the Jews to be foredoomed. Yet, they fought on, hatched both military and political plans for the overthrow of the Nazis."

The exhibit will contain more than 1,000 photographs, documents, posters, reports, and Nazi announcements that vividly depict Jewish life before and during the Nazi occupation of Warsaw. A great number of the items bring out in bold relief the tragic, final days of the Ghetto.

The pictures and the printed material are outlined in ten categories under the titles of: Jewish Warsaw Before World War II; The Outbreak Of The War And The Occupation Of Warsaw; The Ghetto; Mass Deportation For Annihilation; After The Mass Deportation; The Uprising; The Aftermath; Participation Of The Ghetto Fighters In Warsaw; Ruins Of The Ghetto; Monuments and Commemorations.

In connection with the observance of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising, the 87th U.S. Congress issued a joint resolution that stated: "That the twenty-first day of April, 1963, is hereby marked in recognition of the astounding courage displayed by the uprising; the men, women, the children who met death on that tragic day and those who perished in concentration camps and in gas chambers, symbolize the indestructible spirit of liberty which throughout history has ultimately triumphed against the forces of tyranny."

The actual uprising came on the eve of Passover, April 19, 1943, when the Jewish men and women bearing inadequate arms began their heroic resistance to the overwhelming Nazi forces. These arms were two machine-guns, primitive hand-grenades, and Molotov cocktails.

The fighting lasted over a month and ended when the armed men of Nazi planes and soldiers had leveled the entire Warsaw Ghetto to a mass of rubble and debris. Only about 50 survived out of 55,000 who had perished. The survivors had escaped through the underground sewer system, in a program to his Nazi superiors in Berlin. 88 General Jürgen Stroop described: "There are no Jews left in the Warsaw Ghetto."

YIVO, founded in Vilna, Poland, is the only secular Jewish research center in the world outside of Israel. It moved its headquarters to New York in 1946, to escape from the Nazi regime. (Continued on Page 24)

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE RULES JEW-BAITING TO BE PUNISHED SEES "PROVOCATION BEYOND ENDURANCE"

The Divisional Court allowed an appeal by George Herbert Burgoine, a superintendent of the Metropolitan Police, against a decision of London Quarter Sessions (Chairman: R. E. Seaton, Esq.) on September 4, 1962, allowing an appeal by John Collis Campbell Jordan against his conviction by Bow Street Magistrates' Court on August 20, 1962, of using at Trafalgar Square on July 1, 1962, at a public meeting, insulting words whereby a breach of the peace was likely to be occasioned, contrary to section 5 of the Public Order Act, 1936.

Mr. Graham Swanwick, Q.C., and Mr. W. M. Howard appeared for the prosecution; the defendant appeared in person, reports the London Times. Mr. Swanwick said that in deciding that, although insulting words were used, no breach of the peace was likely to be occasioned, quarter sessions were wrong, first, since the wrong test was applied and, secondly, since on any view they reached a manifestly wrong decision.

The case was of general importance, particularly to the Metropolitan Police, who wished to know how far section 5 of the Act of 1936 empowered them to deal adequately with insults directed to matters of religion and race and which were likely to lead to a disturbance of law and order by setting one class of society against another.

Quarter sessions were wrong in their construction of section 5, because they gave "breach of the peace" too restricted an interpretation by confining it to the commission of assault. Further, they misconstrued the section because they applied the test of the effect of the words on a reasonable person.

The court also considered the effect of the words on the audience and the composition of the audience to whom the words were addressed.

Describing the Trafalgar Square meeting, counsel said that a crowd of 2,000 at 3 p.m. grew to 5,000 by 5.15 p.m. A group of 200 to 300 immediately in front of the speakers' platform contained many Jews, nuclear disarmers and communists. Between the crowd and platform was a line of police. There was disorder throughout the meeting.

In his speech, Jordan said: "More and more people every day are opening their eyes and coming to see that Hitler was right. They are coming to see that our real enemies, the people we should have fought, were not Hitler and the National Socialists of Germany, but world Jewry and its associates in this country."

There was complete disorder and outcry and a surge towards the platform, says the London Times. Police stopped the meeting and later the greatest difficulty in restoring order.

Counsel said that while courts must be careful of the limits they placed on free speech, if speakers chose to threaten, abuse or insult somebody they must do it in a way that did not provoke the people they were addressing. Having regard to the composition of the audience, Jordan must have realized that his words were likely to lead to a breach of the peace.

Mr. Jordan said that a gang of 200 to 300 Jews and communists had gone to the meeting intending to stop it being held. The test of whether an offence had been committed was not the reaction of obvious delinquent troublemakers but that of ordinary reasonable British people. The words used had to be not merely highly insulting but also insulting to the reasonable citizen who was provoked to violence.

The Lord Chief Justice asked whether if every reasonable Jew were present he would not have been provoked?

Mr. Jordan said that such a person would not have been provoked. The Lord Chief Justice said that at the meeting at about 3 p.m. there was a crowd of about 5,000 people, of whom about 200 to 300 people were positioned together in front of the speakers' platform. This group was said to contain many Jews, supporters of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament and Communists. That group of young people intended to prevent any meeting being held at all. Between the crowd and the speakers' platform was a line of police.

There was disorder throughout the meeting, mainly, but not exclusively, among the group of young people, and the possibility of ttempted to attack the platform and the speakers. In other parts of the crowd the disorder was confined to heckling. The meeting was addressed by one John Hutchings Tyndall and, during that address, the prosecutor stopped the meeting four times by shouting order.

After that address, the defendant read a speech to the crowd. At about 5.15 p.m., the crowd had grown to about 5,000 people. At the end, there was complete disorder, an outcry and a general surge forward by the crowd towards the speakers' platform. When this happened, the prosecutor stopped the meeting, says the London Times. The police had the greatest difficulty in restoring order. Twenty people present at the meeting were arrested for offences involving breaches of the peace.

Quarter sessions had found as a fact that a great many of the words used by the defendant were highly insulting, but that they were not likely to lead, ordinarily, to a breach of the peace by committing assaults and, accordingly, allowed the defendant's appeal against conviction.

The question for the opinion of the High Court was whether the words in section 5 of the Public Order Act, 1936, "whereby a breach of the peace was likely to be occasioned" could be properly construed to mean "likely to lead to a breach of the peace by the ordinary citizen in the circumstances of the case."

His Lordship had difficulty in understanding what quarter sessions had intended to convey. It was possible that they had in mind a hypothetical audience of ordinary citizens, but he thought that their intention was to break up the meeting, whatever words the defendant used.

Even if that were so, his Lordship, having read the defendant's speech, could not imagine any reasonable citizen, certainly not one who was a Jew, not being provoked beyond endurance. That applied not only to Jews, but to coloured men, and to quite a number of people of this country who were told that they were the tools of the Jews and had fought on the wrong side.

There was no room in the present case for any test whether the members of the audience were reasonable men or ordinary citizens. This was the Public Order Act to keep public order in public places.

Even if it were assumed in the defendant's favour that the body of young persons around the speakers' platform were hoodlums and intended to prevent him speaking, yet the police prevented them from obstructing the speakers and the defendant then addressed them as the "red rabble present here."

The defendant's words were deliberately intended to be insulting to the people who were being restrained by the police. It was a clear case for conviction under section 5. The defendant, who conducted his own case, elevated it into a cause célèbre in the sense that, if he were convicted, it would make inroads into the doctrine of free speech.

It was nothing of the sort. A man was entitled to express his views as strongly as he liked, to criticize and to say disagreeable things about his opponents. But he must not threaten, abuse, or insult by hitting with words. This was a clear case where the defendant was guilty of the offence, says the London Times. The appeal would be allowed and the case would go back to the quarter sessions.

Mr. Justice Ashworth and Mr. Justice Winn agreed.

Jordan, a small but dogged National Socialist (Nazi) movement leader, was charged with leading a group of about 200 to 300 people to the meeting and three of his followers were given sentences of six months, writes Tom Jordan, in the New York Herald Tribune. One of Jordan's followers, later that day, wrote that

Jordan, a small but dogged National Socialist, a Tory at the Old Bailey found the four guilty of organizing a unit of their followers in such a manner that "reasonable apprehension" was aroused that the detachment might be used as a strong-arm force in promoting a political cause.

The unit, a Storm Trooper-style band that the British Nazis called "Spearshead," was described by a Crown Counsel as an "inner elite corps" of the National Socialist movement in England.

World-Renowned Anthropologist, Top Authority On Negro Race Problems, Predicted Present Trends In Africa

Dr. Melville J. Herskovits, aged sixty-seven years, director of African studies at Northwestern University, at Evanston, Illinois, and an internationally known authority on Africa, died of a heart stroke in his home. He was born in Bellefontaine, Ohio. He had returned home from a month's stay in Evanston Hospital after a heart attack suffered since his return from Accra, Ghana. There he helped Prof. Ivan I. Poykhin, head of the Institute of African Studies of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, to establish a program for the first International Congress of Africanists, a forum of researchers from 55 nations. In a recent interview published by The Chicago Tribune, Dr. Herskovits had urged an end to the Katanga secession to prevent "another Korea" in Africa.

A 1920 University of Chicago graduate in anthropology, Dr. Herskovits received his doctorate in 1923 from Columbia University; and was a lecturer in anthropology there. After one year at Howard University he went to Northwestern as an assistant professor; had been a full professor since 1935.

He was the first man to hold a chair of African studies in any university, and was head of Negro Studies for the American Council on Learned Societies from 1935 to 1950. He leaves his widow, the former Miss Frances Shapiro, and their daughter, Jean Frances Herskovits, also an anthropologist, at Evanston, Ill., and the late wife's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Shapiro, at Pennsylvania University; also a sister, Mrs. Charlotte Levy, of Hoboken, N. J., a pianist, and music teacher.

Commenting on the death of Dr. Herskovits, J. Lyndon Shanley, Associate Dean of the College of Liberal Arts, gave this statement to the University Daily: "Dr. Herskovits' death is a sad and tragic loss to the university and to the College of Liberal Arts. He was one of the most distinguished members of the faculty. He was known and highly regarded throughout the world for his work. Among his many accomplishments was the founding and development of the program of African studies. When he died, Dr. Herskovits held the professorship of African affairs."

The program of African studies at Northwestern began first as a grant from the Carnegie Corporation of New York; and at present, is sponsored by a grant of more than $1.3 million from the Ford Foundation. The program is recognized as outstanding, and has attracted students from all over the world.

Dr. Herskovits is to be honored in coming months by a series of articles by nine internationally known scholars in "Current Anthropology," an international journal. The series was originally planned by Alan Merriam, former N.U. anthropology professor now at the University of Indiana; and L. K. Hsu, chairman of the Northwestern anthropology department.

The introduction to the series was published in the February issue. The articles will continue until the end of the 1963-64 academic year. In the introduction to the series, Dr. Herskovits is praised as a pioneer in his chosen field, and as a man whose influence in anthropology is incalculable.

The introduction also points out that "when Dr. Herskovits was still speaking of Africa as a dark continent, he was predicting the trends of its development, which have since unfolded spectacularly."

Dr. Herskovits' last book, "The Human Factor In Changing Africa," was published in October, 1962. He had done research in Dutch Guiana, Brazil, the Caribbean, and various regions of Africa. His work has been concerned primarily with the social problems of the Negro race.

Under the heading, "A Tragic Loss," the Daily Northwestern said:

"The death of Melville J. Herskovits leaves a void on the faculty of this university that will be difficult — if not impossible — to

THE WARSAW GHETTO UPRISING AND ITS HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

PUBLICATION OF THE WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS

Twenty years ago, on April 19, 1943, began the last chapter in the liquidation of the largest ghetto in Europe, Warsaw. This phase was not a "usual" matter of removing Jewish men, women, and children to certain death; it was marked by a heroic and mortal struggle by the men and women of the ghetto, not only against the Nazi forces which tried to evacuate the ghetto, but also against the Nazi tyranny and brutality as such. The defenders of the ghetto knew very well that the odds were wholly against them; that the enemy was implacable, without compassion, determined to raze the ghetto to ashes. They knew that their fate was sealed, that they had no chance to win.

What then was the aim and the purpose of the uprising? It was expressed by the fighters themselves in an appeal to the Polish population of Warsaw on April 28, 1943, in the following words: "All of us may perish in the struggle, but surrender we shall not. We thirst for revenge and retribution to our common enemy for all his crimes. This is a fight for your freedom and ours, for your and our human, social and national honor and dignity. We seek revenge for the crimes of Oswiecim, Treblinka, Belzec, and Majdanek. Death to the executioners and their minions! Long live the life and death struggle against the occupant!"

We notice that the fighters sought not only to avenge the millions of Jews murdered by the Nazis and their helpers but also and foremostly to prove to the world that the spirit of freedom and resistance was still alive, even though the situation was most tragic and desperate. They wanted, by their heroic deeds, to kindle and strengthen the forces of freedom and hope anywhere, at that darkest hour in the life of the Jewish people and the world. Their struggle was to serve as an inspiration to freedom-loving people all over the world to fight until death against despotism and terrorism, for freedom, justice and dignity.

It is not without significance that a large number of the fighters consisted of Zionist youth. The uprising was thus, at least in part, a demonstration of the great force of Zionism in Jewish life, a force which defied the British in Palestine and made possible the triumph over the invading Arab armies in 1948. Thus, the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising might be regarded as the inspiration for the later struggle and the victory of the Jewish people for their homeland, Israel.

The gallant fighters of Warsaw were in the end overwhelmed by the superior forces of evil. The struggle on a large scale continued for over three weeks and smaller groups kept up resistance for a long period thereafter, longer than the resistance of the Polish armies in September 1939 and of Belgium and Holland in 1940.

This is what the Jews of the world are commemorating, together with all freedom-loving people in the world — a manifestation of unparalleled courage by a handful of determined men and women who set an example for generations to come that it is preferable to die on one's feet than to live on one's knees; that the forces of evil may triumph for a while against determined resistance, but must, in the end, give way to freedom and justice.

The Warsaw Ghetto Uprising will, in the words of the Joint Resolution of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, serve as a "manifestation of the indestructible spirit of liberty which throughout history has ultimately triumphed over the forces of tyranny."

The Warsaw Ghetto Uprising also has another meaning, more tragic and also less inspiring: it marked the practical culmination of the destruction of the Jewish communities in Eastern Europe. As long as sizeable ghettos were permitted to exist, there was still some hope that the Nazis were willing to tolerate the existence of some Jews in these areas. The decision to erase the Warsaw Ghetto demonstrated that this hope was in vain. Thus April 19, 1943 is also to be regarded as a day which finally sealed the fate of East European Jewry, a date to be remembered as one of despair and mourning. The combination of pride and mourning is the spirit in which the date has to be commemorated.

The commemoration of the 20th anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising takes place at a time of intensified neo-Nazi and neo-Fascist activity in many countries of the world. They are also working toward their combination into international units, with the purpose of establishing world-wide bodies. All this could probably be epitomized in the example of Michael Slatyer, son of the late British Air Marshal, Sir Leonard Slatyer, who proclaimed that he had taken over the leadership of the British National Socialist movement after their leader, Colin Jordan, was jailed for his Nazi activities. "I am proud to be a member of the National Socialist movement and I admire Hitler as a great man," said Michael Slatyer. How little knowledge of the crimes of Hitler must he have, the son of one of the top-ranking military leaders of Great Britain, whose gallant stand against the Nazi tyranny will remain one of the brightest pages in the history of that nation!

The tragedy of the Warsaw ghetto should serve notice to the world what evil forces of racism may accomplish if let loose; it must serve as a warning not to permit them to grow once again. The epic of the ghetto uprising, on the other hand, is a reminder that the Jews are not willing to let these evil forces poison the minds of the people and that they, together with all righteous and freedom-loving men, will fight against these outgrowths of the dark past.

Jews first came to Warsaw in the fourteenth century. Small in numbers (150 to 160 in 1433), they were driven out of the city in 1493, and their property was taken over by Gentiles. Jews returned to Warsaw at the end of the sixteenth century, but only for the duration of the sessions of the Polish Parliament. Only in the eighteenth century were Jews permitted to settle permanently, against payment of a special tax.

The number of Jews increased considerably at the end of the eighteenth century by a great influx of German Jews, who became an important element in the economic life of the city. It was, however, only in 1862 that Jews were granted unrestricted freedom of residence, economic activity, and acquisition of property. By 1884 Warsaw had 64,000 Jews, and in 1882 about 130,000. At the end of the nineteenth and at the beginning of the twentieth century large numbers of Jews from other parts of Russia came to Warsaw, increasing the Jewish population to 380,000 in 1910.

When Warsaw became, after the First World War, the capital of the independent Polish Republic, the Jewish population grew again. At the outbreak of the war, in September 1939, the Jewish population of Warsaw was estimated at about 380,000, comprising some 11% of the Jews of Poland. It was the communal, cultural, organizational, and art center of Polish Jewry, the largest and the most compact traditional Jewry on the European continent, accounting for over 3,300,000 at that time.

The Warsaw Ghetto was formally established in November, 1940. It was the second ghetto in Poland; the first was Lodz, having been created in April of that year. Later in the summer of 1940 the Nazis began to build an eight foot high wall to surround an area of about four kilometers in length, 2.5 kilometers in width. This area of about 1000 acres incorporated part of the industrial district to the north of the Railroad Station.

In September, 1940, about 240,000 Jews and some 30,000 Gentiles lived in the ghetto area. On October 16 of the same year the Nazis issued an order to the 80,000 non-Jews to move out within two weeks, and over 100,000 Jews, who lived outside the ghetto, were ordered to move in. Together with the Jews, all converts, Gentile descendants of Jews, and the non-Jewish wives, who refused to divorce their husbands, were all driven into the ghetto. All in all, the ghetto comprised, at that time, about 380,000 Jews. On November 15, 1940, all open gates in the area were closed and guards stationed at each of them. This completed the isolation of the Warsaw Jews from the outer world.

The number of Jews in the ghetto increased later by the arrival of deportees from other parts of Poland, amounting to some 120,000. The total number of Jews who were in the ghetto at one time or another was about 500,000. Even before their isolation in the ghetto the Jews were deprived of practically all their assets. By concentrating the total Jewish population in the ghetto, 173,000 economically active Jews were forced to look for work in that small area or to starve. How difficult the situation became at once, is illustrated by the fact that to serve in a forced labor battalion, even on the Russian border, became a privilege. The situation of the deportees from other parts of Poland was even more desperate: they had no housing, no work, the majority of them died within a year. Some joined, of their own free will, transports to the death camp of Treblinka, in order to end their miserable life.

In 1941 about 10% of the Jews of Warsaw died of hunger and disease. Subsequently, the mortality rate rose to 15% per annum. At a basis of 100 in January, 1941, it rose to 424 in June and 819 in August. All in all, between November 1940, and April, 1943, 99,000 Jews died in the Warsaw Ghetto. This is not astonishing when we consider that the rations supplied by the Germans provided between 177 and 219 calories per day in the months January to August, 1941, while the normal calorie need was established by the Germans at 2580 per day. By the end of 1941 about 100,000 Jews in Warsaw lived on once-a-day soup, sometimes prepared from hay, given to them by the Jewish Social Self-Help. Epidemics of typhoid and other diseases took a heavy toll. Stanislaw Roszycki described the situation in the ghetto and its inhabitants in his diary contained in the "illegal" archives of the Warsaw ghetto in the following words: "They (the inhabitants) consist in their majority of ghastly apparitions, wretched, ragged fellows, woeful remains of human beings. On the streets, children scream, cry, die of hunger."

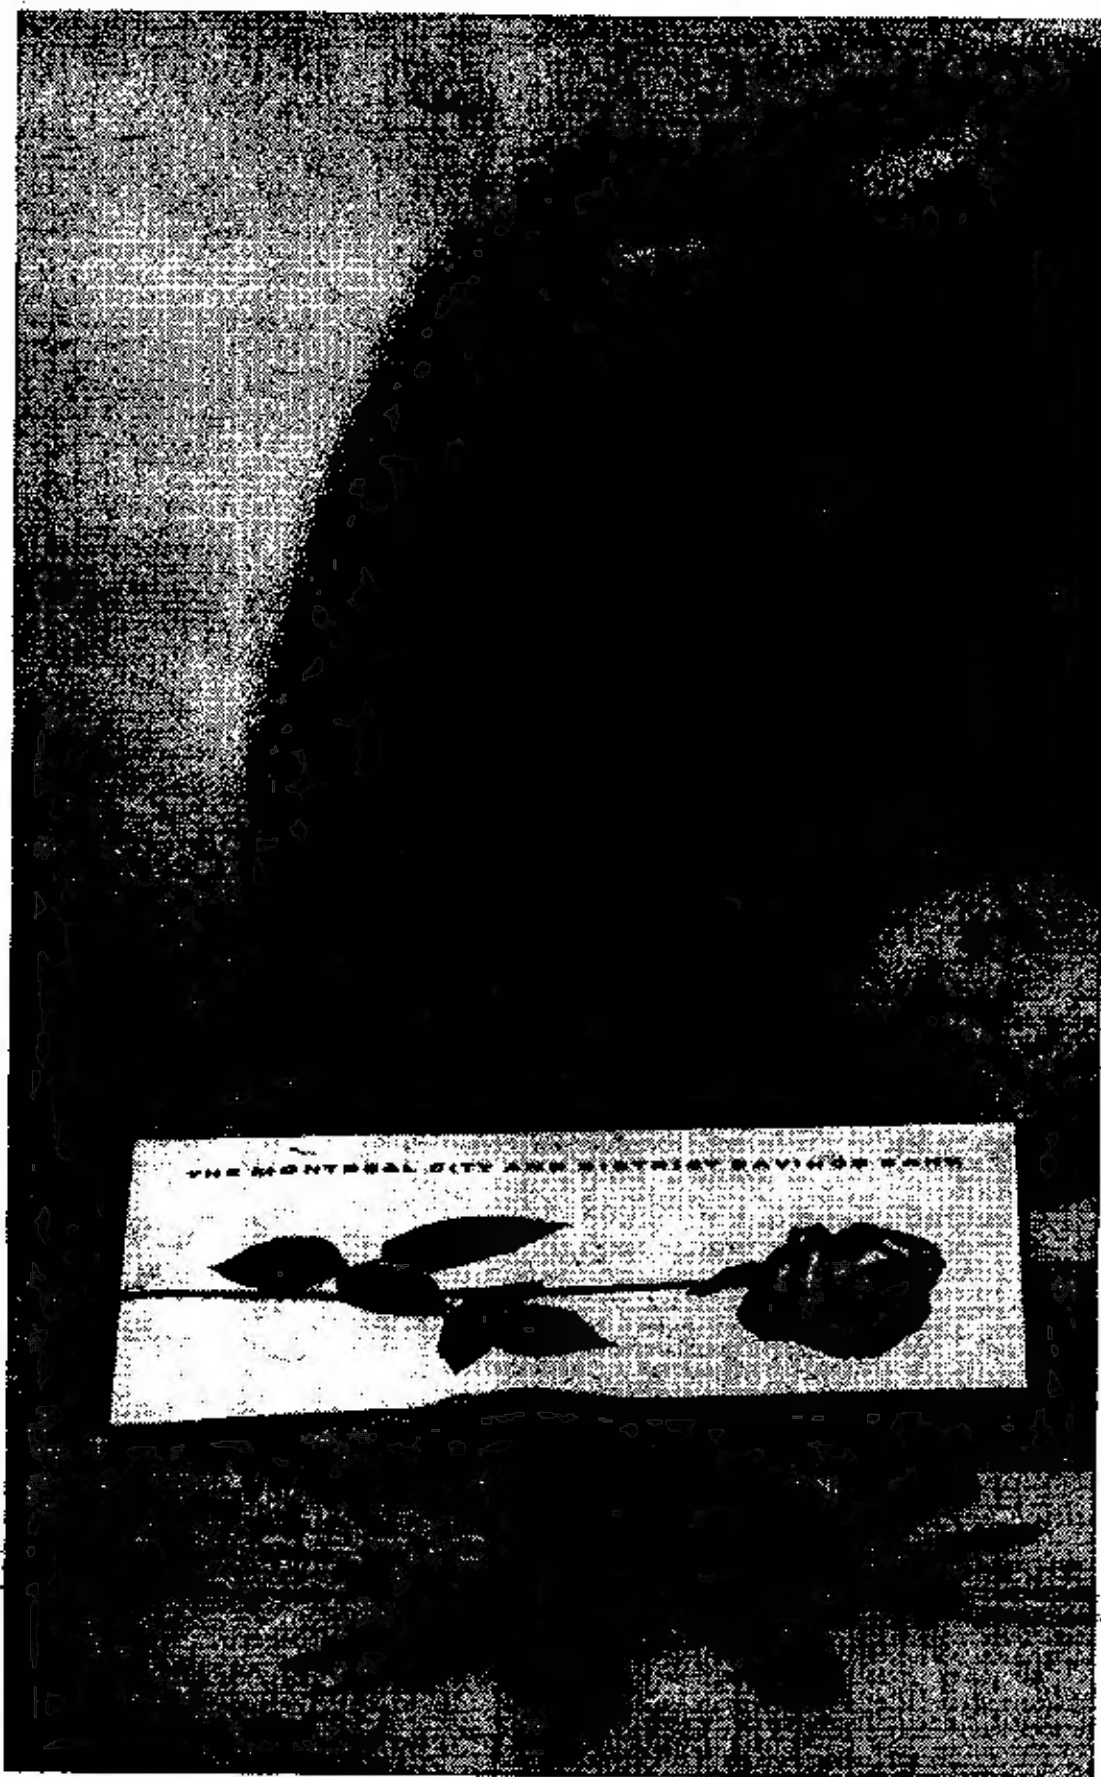

"About 1000 die monthly of epidemics. Early in the morning, on every street, you find corpses of beggars, children, old people, youths, and women." Mr. Roszycki went on to describe the young and old, men and women, bourgeois and proletarians, members of the intelligentsia, and businessmen, all debased and degraded. They were begging a month, two or three, but in the end they all died in the streets or in the hospitals, of cold, hunger, disease or depression. They were being swallowed up by the streets into which they were thrown brutally and mercilessly.

Individual shootings began soon after the occupation of Warsaw, mass executions in April, 1942, and raids for slave laborers in the East netted, in 1941-42, some 18,000. In July, 1942, the Nazis started large-scale action to liquidate the Warsaw Ghetto.

The plan called for the transporting of 6,000 Jews per day to the East, meaning to the death camp of Treblinka, to Lublin-Majdanek, Minsk, and other places. The total of Jews deported until 1943 amounted to about 300,000. Between July 22 and September 21, 1942, about 270,000 Jews were deported.

The deportations were concluded on the Day of Atonement — a most significant day for every Jew. All that was left by that time in the ghetto were some 65,000 or 70,000 Jews. Because of the decrease in population, the area of the ghetto was twice reduced: in August and in September, 1942. On this last occasion it was reduced to an area of 950 by 200 meters.

A kind of lull set in in Poland by the end of 1942, after the infamous "Aktion Reinhard," the code name for the liquidation of the Polish Jews, was largely completed. It was in the months of December 1942 and January 1943 that the Jewish fighter groups in the ghetto were organized and the acquisition of arms—highly expensive—started. Actually, SS-General Jürgen Stroop admitted that preparations for the uprising had started in the middle of 1942.

The first act of armed resistance in the Warsaw Ghetto occurred in January 1943, when 200 gendarmes, 800 Latvian and Lithuanian SS, in addition to Polish policemen, infiltrated the ghetto. They were met with hand grenades, revolver shots, stones,

View of Dubrovnik, on the Adriatic coast—one of many stops on your KLM tour of Greece, Yugoslavia, and the Greek Islands

Here's a unique travel plan from KLM that enables you to enjoy Yugoslavia and Greece both from land and sea.

KLM's new booklet: "Gateway to Travel Enchantment" contains a comprehensive repertoire of fascinating vacation possibilities. Typical example is KLM's "Tour Number 2" which outlines an intriguing 23-day air-sea travel plan to Greece, Yugoslavia, and the Greek Islands. Read on for a day-by-day itinerary, then plan to see your Travel Agent soon.

1. KLM's "Tour Number 2" is budget-priced to suit every purse. The all-inclusive "land" portion of this delightful European vacation, which encompasses hotel accommodation, excursions, motorcoach and ship travel, etc., is standardized at $545.50. KLM's economy class roundtrip air fare should be added to this figure, dependent upon your starting point in Canada.

2. Off to a flying start . . . to Dubrovnik! A KLM DC-8 jet takes you non-stop from New York to Amsterdam, where you get a connecting flight to Dubrovnik, "Pearl of the Adriatic". After a morning's sightseeing through this historic walled city dating back to Venetian times, you spend the afternoon swimming and relaxing. Next morning, you are ready for a full-day excursion to Kotor, Cetinje, St. Stefan and Budva, on the Montenegrin coast. In the evening, you board the M.S. Jadran for Corfu, the most beautiful of all the Greek islands. There, you make a short port of call, with possibilities for shore excursions through this gem of the Ionian Sea.

3. Then Athens . . . for five glorious days. Here you find antiquity side by side with the best word in modernity—all the glories of ancient Greece plus the sophisticated charm of Athens of today. You see the Acropolis in striking contrast to the Royal Palace, the University, and the stadium. You admire the chic and elegance that has made Athenian women famous the world over. You enjoy the restaurants, the shops, the cafés. And you've lots of leisure time left over for side trips and excursions.

4. 5-Day cruise to the Greek Islands. You embark on the M/V Rhodes in the evening. Your cabin, complete with bath, is on the Main Deck. For five fabulous days, you re-live the legends of Greek mythology, visiting the Palace of Minos, at Knossos; the museum of Heraklion, the ancient ruins of Phaeos and Gortyn. You sail to the islands of Halicarnassus, Kos, and Patmos and go sightseeing through their charming harbours and picturesque villages and towns. You view the white houses and windmills of Mykonos and the exquisite mosaics of Delos.

5. 7-Day motorcoach tour. First stop, Delphi—spiritual center of ancient Greece and home of the famous Oracle of pre-biblical times. Then, next morning, to Larissa for lunch and on to Salonica for dinner and overnight. Next day, you cross the Yugoslav border and drive to Skopje, main city in Macedonia. Then comes Nis—an important crossroads on the Balkan peninsula—Topola, and Belgrade, capital of Yugoslavia. Finally, to Zagreb, second largest city in Yugoslavia and capital of the republic of Croatia. From there you catch a plane to Amsterdam for your connection back to New York, via KLM DC-8 jet.

6. "KLM Gateway to Travel Enchantment" is an invaluable booklet containing useful information to help you plan your European vacation. As well as giving you a day-by-day breakdown on 6 representative KLM tours and half-a-dozen roundtrip suggestions on how you can best take advantage of KLM's multi-stopover plan, it also includes information on Amsterdam Airport's tax-free shopping facilities, how to rent a car, etc. All you need to do to get your free copy is to complete and mail the coupon at the bottom of this advertisement.

7. KLM helps you with customs forms and entry papers. Some countries require visitors to fill out special customs forms and entry papers. KLM planes always carry the papers you'll need to enter the country at your next destination. On all KLM flights the purser can help passengers with disembarkation documents. Incidentally, if a KLM plane has to fly to another airport because of weather conditions, your purser is personally responsible to see that you get to your final destination as quickly as possible.

8. KLM believes in double-checking everything. Before every flight a DC-8 jet gets two "walk-around" inspections, one by a KLM maintenance crew, one by the flight engineer. He walks around the entire plane to double-check about 60 key points. Including such details as hydraulic fluid, engine intake ducts, tire treads, brake linings, toilets, light and power for the galley. Significant point: KLM technicians put in an average of 74,475 man-hours a year in order to maintain one DC-8 jet.

9. The tires of a KLM plane are inspected after every landing. KLM keeps spare tires at every landing point. KLM started the idea of airlines "pooling" spare parts all around the world. This is now standard procedure. KLM began it about 30 years ago.

10. KLM engineers baby their DC-8 jets. During a major overhaul, they insist on the hangar doors being closed to keep out dust and dirt. KLM also has a special dust-free room at Amsterdam for the maintenance of sensitive gyroscopes for compasses, etc. Not a speck of dirt is allowed to interfere with the proper operation of the compass. Before entering this dust-free maintenance room, you must put on a nylon overall and cap and remove your shoes.

11. KLM flies to every continent in the world. KLM has been established in Canada since 1946 and now has offices in principal Canadian cities. Point worth noting: KLM has daily flights out of Montreal and New York for Europe. During the peak Summer season, you can choose from nine weekly flights from Montreal and four daily flights from New York.

12. See your Travel Agent. Having themselves been professionals in the field of air transportation for 44 years, KLM recognize that it takes professionals to plan trips efficiently. In every city in Canada, KLM is represented by a professional—your Travel Agent.

Yiddish Poetry Of Leivick Produced On Records For Blind

Poetry of the foremost Yiddish poet of the 20th Century, H. Leivick, has been produced in Yiddish on high-fidelity records for the Jewish blind, it has been announced by Mrs. Harry J. Finke, president of the Jewish Braille Institute of America. The two-record sets will be distributed on loan, free of charge, to Yiddish-speaking blind persons in the United States, Israel, and other countries. Production of the records was made possible through the sponsorship of Miss Dora Chalfin, of New York City, in memory of Samuel and Luba Harriton.

Leivick, who was born in White Russia in 1888, was the author of "The Golem", and other well-known plays and poetry. His real name was Levi Halpern, but he always signed his work, H. Leivick. He came to the United States in 1913 and died in New York on December 23, 1962. His verse was chosen for the recording in response to numerous requests by Yiddish-speaking blind persons throughout the country. It is recited by Maxim Brodyn, the noted Jewish actor.

"What these records mean to the Yiddish-speaking blind," said Mrs. Finke, "was expressed in a letter received from the daughter of a blind man who served as a test listener. In thanking the Institute for sending the record, the daughter said: 'It was the first time I heard my father speak enthusiastically, just as he used to before he went blind, and he played the recording over and over.'"

The Jewish Braille Institute, of which Dr. Jacob Fried is executive director, provides for the cultural and religious needs of the Jewish blind and serves thousands of sightless persons throughout the world without charge. Its program is endorsed by the National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods, the National Women's League of the United Synagogue of America, and the Women's Branch of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America.

The Institute's headquarters are at 48 East 74th Street, New York City, where it maintains a free circulating library of 15,000 braille volumes and an extensive collection of full-length recorded "talking books." It publishes the Jewish Braille Review, a monthly literary magazine, and also issues Hebrew-English braille prayer books and the Bible in Hebrew braille. English and Hebrew braille texts are given to Jewish blind children attending religious schools.

Urges Germans To Keep Their War Scientists Out Of Egypt

The president of the American Jewish Congress, in a cable to Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, called on the West German government to halt the participation by German scientists in the development of "new and refined of them women and children. Testimony at the Old Bailey revealed police found swastikas, portraits of Adolf Hitler; and Julius Streicher; tape recordings of Nazi songs; and "seven cans of sodium chlorate weed-killer when they raided the Nazis' headquarters and homes of the defendants.

fill. In the 36 years that Dr. Herskovits was at Northwestern, he built the program of African studies into what is generally accepted as the finest program of its type in the United States.

"At his death, Dr. Herskovits was one of Northwestern's most eminent scholars, a reputation he achieved in a professional career spent entirely at this university. Among scholars in France and in Africa, he was regarded as America's greatest contemporary anthropologist.

"His renown both here and in Africa — the true test — is vividly illustrated by the legion of friends that Dr. Herskovits has gained for his university and the United States. During the past few years, he has spoken several times at independence day celebrations and other festive occasions in many of the newer African nations.

"To those students who are at Northwestern to study Africa in the program that he organized, his loss will be an extra hard blow. To be sure, the program will go on and will be capably staffed; but, something major and irreplaceable will be missing."

Private funeral services were held for Dr. Herskovits. University memorial services were held at Lutkin Hall. Instead of sending flowers, friends could send donations to the Herskovits Memorial Scholarship Fund.

The following appreciation of Dr. Herskovits was issued by the Northwestern University Librarian who installed a memorial exhibit of his works as a tribute:

"Melville J. Herskovits was a man of uncommon energy, drive, and zest, three qualities reflective of the tremendous vitality that was his. Wonderfully alive, work-loving and life-loving, he remained young in spirit and, until recently, in body. Full of gusto, he knew how to appreciate the things he liked and how to fight for the ideas in which he believed. Blunt in attack, but in possession of a jocular vein, also when facing his adversaries, he seemed ready to throw off burdens with a smile. Look at the many pictures in which he is smiling, a smile that could be alternately sympathetic, ironic, triumphant.

"Yes, triumphant is the word one naturally turns to in attempting to characterize his life, for he must have overcome many burdens, and his achievements were many and brilliant. But this is not the place in which to record them. Here it shall be stated merely that for the Library the impact of his activities was great. He knew that for anthropological research and for African studies the records of man, as found in books, journals, and other media, are a necessary resource, an indispensable tool. And so, through his initiative, the University Library acquired, when he was chairman of the Department of Anthropology, the remarkable personal library of his great teacher, Franz Boas; and as the Program of African Studies developed, the Library built up, again through his initiative, what is fast becoming one of the strongest collections of Africans to be found in this country and probably anywhere. He said more than once, 'When I am gone, the books will still be here, a foundation on which others may build.'"

"And now he is gone, but the work in which he pioneered will continue. We shall miss him at luncheon discussions. We shall miss his dropping into the Library time and again, introducing one distinguished African visitor after the other. We shall miss his spark. Always stimulated, always stimulating, Melville J. Herskovits lived life fully and added to it. To do this is the best answer to death."

Dr. Herskovits was a close friend of the late George William Cohen, founder-publisher of the Canadian Jewish Review, and of Mrs. Cohen, of Montreal, and a gift copy of his celebrated book, "Man and His Works," was inscribed by him "For George, Florence, and Susan."

techniques of annihilation" by the Nasser regime in Egypt. Dr. Joachim Prinz, of Newark, N. J., citing press reports from Switzerland, charged that hundreds of German technicians and scientists are working with the Egyptian government on the manufacture of bacteriological weapons, chemical poisons, and the utilization of atomic waste materials for military purposes.

"The German government is aware that hundreds of its most talented and gifted scientists are being imported into Egypt for this purpose," Dr. Prinz said. "We do not suggest the German government approves or condones this use of German talent. Yet we cannot understand the professed inability of the German government to protect itself from being drawn into Nasser's avowed intention to finish the job that Hitler began: the destruction of the Jewish people."

"West Germany's claims that Nazism and anti-Semitism play no role in present-day German life are challenged by the reports of the leading role German scientists are playing in creating Nasser's arsenal of annihilation. Only by taking whatever means are required to halt the participation of German nationals in this design of destruction can we judge whether there is in fact a new temper in Germany and a new spirit in the German people."

In his message to the German leader, Dr. Prinz said he recognized that the West German government had no part in sending the scientists and technicians to Egypt, and that they were not dispatched or authorized by the West German government. "But we are shocked by the indifference of the present German administration to the enormous dangers which the work of these German scientists poses both to the peace of the Middle East and to the physical survival of Jews who only yesterday escaped the ravages of Hitlerism," he added.

The American Jewish Congress leader, a former rabbi of Berlin expelled by Hitler in 1937, declared: "The weapons and techniques of destruction now being perfected by these German scientists have no possible application to the economic or industrial development of Egypt, and no conceivable peaceful purpose. The disturbing reports that such an arsenal is being created in Egypt by German scientists is further demonstration that for all his pretensions to elevating the living standards of Egypt's starving and dispossessed millions, Nasser is instead squandering his meager resources on weapons of war."

and acids. Seven truckloads of gendarmes and another unit of Latvian SS had to be employed to break up the Jewish resistance. At that time, 6,000 Jews were deported. The resistance was the result of the appeals to the ghetto inhabitants made on January 18 and 27, 1943, by the Jewish Fighters Organization to resist deportation by force, to barricade the houses: "Every house must become a fortress."

To thwart the German plans, the Jewish Fighters Organization appealed on March 14, 1943 to the Jews not to register for work outside the ghetto.

In April 1943 final plans were laid by the Germans to clear out the ghetto. The task was entrusted to the SS General Jürgen Stroop and a large force of men. According to Stroop's Adjutant, Karl Kalcke, Stroop's command consisted of 1,000 SS-tank grenadiers, about 1,000 men of the SS-cavalry, two units of artillery, one group of army pioneers, and a unit of the SIPO. It also included units of Lithuanian and Polish police. They were equipped with battle arms and weapons.

The Jewish fighters, according to Stroop, had infantry guns, machine pistols, machine guns, and Molotov cocktails. Mrs. Celia Lubetkin-Cukierman, in the Bichman trial, reported that her

Rabbi, Native Of Quebec, Wins Kent Scholarship

Rabbi Neil Gillman, Associate Registrar, Rabbinical Department of The Jewish Theological Seminary of America, has been awarded a Kent fellowship for the academic year 1963-64. Rabbi Gillman, a native of Quebec City, who resided at 401 Lemercier Avenue, Quebec, a 1950 graduate of McGill University, in Montreal, received his Master's degree from the Seminary and was ordained there in 1960. He will use his grant to complete his dissertation for his Ph.D. on the philosophy of religion at Columbia University, in New York.

Kent Graduate Fellowships have been awarded to 21 outstanding men and women, according to an announcement by the Danforth Foundation. The recipients, selected from more than 800 applicants, were chosen for their remarkable promise as leaders within higher education in North America.

The Kent Graduate Fellowship program seeks to identify and encourage graduate students who are preparing for teaching or administration in American colleges and universities and who combine excellence in scholarship with a genuine religious commitment which they hold relevant to their chosen profession. The Fellowships provide up to three years of graduate study with an annual minimum stipend of $1,500 for a single person and $2,000 for a married person, plus tuition and fees.

Kent Fellowships were established in 1922 as part of the program of National Council on Religion in Higher Education under the leadership of Professor Charles Foster Kent to advance the concern for religion in liberal education. The support and administration of the Kent Fellowships were assumed by the Danforth Foundation on September 1, 1962. The Foundation was established in 1927 by the late Mr. and Mrs. William H. Danforth to strengthen higher education through its own programs and through grants to colleges, universities, and other educational agencies.

group of twenty had two guns and some home-made bombs which had to be ignited by matches; they had a revolver and a grenade.

The Jewish Fighters Organization, known by the Polish initials ZOB, was established in July, 1942, and consolidated in November, 1942. Its backbone was the youth organizations of the various Zionist groups: Hechalutz, Hashomer Hatzair, Poalei-Zion Zeirei-Zion (Mapai), Dror, Hanoar Hatzioni and Akiba (General Zionists), and Poalei Zion Left. They were joined by groups of the Bund and the Polish Workers Party, and assisted by unorganized Jewish youth. In addition to the ZOB, there were also the Jewish Military Union (known as ZZW) and independent groups. There were men and women among them, but also children aged 14 to 15.

The Jewish Fighters Organization

tion was commanded by a General Staff, whose head was the legendary Mordechai Anielewicz, of Hashomer Hatzair.

The members of the General Staff were: Yitzhak Cukierman (Hechalutz), Marek Edelman (Bund), Hersa Berlinaki (Left Poalei Zion) Johanan Morgenstern (Poalei Zion-Zeirei Zion), and Michael Rozenfeld (Communist). Of them, only Cukierman and Edelman survived.

The last phase of the armed struggle started on April 19, 1943. It was Passover. It had all the trimmings of a regular war, including daily bulletins by the two warring sides. Stroop reported daily to his superior in Cracow, and the Jewish Fighters Organization issued battle communiques and reports. There were also secret reports of the Jewish Underground.

Units of the SS and German police with armored cars marched into the ghetto on April 19. It was no surprise to the ghetto fighters: although the German plan was kept secret, it actually became known to the ghetto two days in advance of that date.

Stroop claimed that the ghetto resistance fighters were very well informed about all measures of the German Administration. The invaders were met with Molotov cocktails and gunfire. The Germans retreated after a number of their men had been killed, 24 wounded, and two armored cars disabled. The rejoicing among the Jewish fighters was great: "Those German heroes retreated, afraid and terrorized by Jewish home-made bombs and hand grenades."

The Jewish resistance stunned the Germans: the predecessor of General Stroop, SS Colonel Sammern-Frankengess, who led the operation did not expect it at all. When it came, he panicked and informed Stroop that the fight was lost, and that he decided to ask his superiors for "Stukas" (dive bombers) to quell the uprising. Somehow Stroop talked him out of it.

The Nazis returned the next day, with a 300-man SS unit and were met again with fire. The Germans rolled out artillery and set aflame the houses from which the resistance was mounted. The struggle continued from day to day, causing large numbers of casualties, mainly among women, children, and old people, and the destruction of more and more plants and houses in the ghetto. The Jewish fighters held out even in burnt-out houses. Nazi units had to force themselves into every house to seize the Jewish resistors.

Bulletin Number 5 of the Jewish Fighters Organization described in the following words the conditions under which they had to fight as of April 22: "The ghetto was all day long enveloped in a thick smoke cloud, increasing in intensity from hour to hour. Undoubtedly the Germans had decided simply to smoke out the ghetto, having in the meantime realized that they could not break their resistance in open fight. Thousands of women and children were burnt to death in the houses, some appearing in burning clothes, looking like living torches. But the Fighters' decision not to give in was not weakened, even under these circumstances."

Mrs. Lubetkin described in her testimony that during the first days Jews were embracing and kissing each other on the streets; they lived to see the day of revenge for their brethren.

To break the Jewish resistance, the Nazis divided the ghetto on April 23, into 24 districts, and dispatched to each of them a strong force of shock troops. All the heroic deeds of the Jewish fighters were of no avail against these troops. Four days after the start of the action it became clear to the leadership that they were doomed, but the main objective of the uprising, as Anielewicz so vividly expressed it to his deputy, Cukierman (who was on the Aryan side, i.e. outside the ghetto), was achieved: "The ghetto was defending itself."

Because of the German strategy, the main activity of the Jewish fighters from April 22 consisted in partisan warfare. It continued without interruption to the end of the large-scale action, on May 16, 1943, when, according to Stroop, the total number of Jews seized and known to have perished amounted to 56,045. In addition, five to six thousand had perished in explosions and fires. Of the over 66,000, some 7,000 were killed during the action, and 6,929 were deported at once to die in Treblinka.

The Nazis had to destroy 631 bunkers and all but eight houses of the ghetto, in order to quell the uprising.

An undetermined number of Jews succeeded in escaping to the Aryan side. The difficulties encountered were described in a report by the Jewish National Committee of Poland of May 24, 1944, in the following words:

"On May 10, 1943, two sorties of members of the Jewish Fighters Organization in the Aryan Quarter of Warsaw snatched from the jaws of death 80 of their comrades still in the ruins of the ghetto. They were conducted through sewage canals and brought to the Aryan side in broad daylight, almost under the eyes of the German gendarmes and police."

Although the large-scale action ended by proclamation of Stroop on May 16, 1943, it did not signify the actual end to the fighting: for weeks thereafter sporadic fights still took place in the ghetto. Individual fighters and whole groups of them hidden in the burnt down houses continued to fight desperately.

The ghetto uprising made a great impact on the Polish population. The ghetto became known among the Poles as the Ghetto-grad (an adaptation to Stalin-grad). However, although liaison between the ghetto fighters and the Polish workers' underground was maintained, the material assistance received by the Jews was minimal.

Stroop, in Warsaw prison after the war, claimed that the Polish population showed an extremely passive attitude toward the fight. The Polish police assisted actively in the crushing of the uprising. The Polish Government-in-Exile waited until May 18, 1943, with a call to the Polish people to help the ghetto fighters. This happened after five months of frantic efforts by Jews, at a time when it was already too late. Young Poles, apparently belonging to the underground, permitted Jews to escape through sewage canals only when paid 10,000 zlotys per person. The Jewish Fighters had thus to count only upon themselves.

Stroop himself was visibly impressed by the resistance. He stated in his report on the ghetto action that new fighting groups, twenty to thirty or in larger numbers, of Jewish youth, aged 20 to 25, with a corresponding number of women among them, again and again kindled new resistance. These groups had orders to fight until the last man and to commit suicide rather than to be taken prisoner. The women were armed in the same way as the men. Frequently they fired from pistols in both hands. According to Stroop, the Germans observed over and over again that Jews, despite burning fires, preferred to return to the ghetto instead of surrendering.

The struggle of the Ghetto fighters was against overwhelming odds. In the end, the powerful enemy achieved its goal and Stroop could "proudly" report to his superior: "The former Jewish Quarter of Warsaw exists no more."

Details were presented by Mr. Bronfman, who said that in several sectors of Canada in the past twelve months, some 520 endowments, ranging from $1,000 upwards, had been underwritten, payable during the next decade. The plan calls for enlisting the support of two per cent of Jewish families everywhere. The plan perpetuates the family name of the endower through recording births, anniversaries, bar mitzvah, birthdays, graduations, and deaths and linking these with the endowment of higher education in Israel. The endowment fund, when completed, will yield annually and perpetually a minimum of five million dollars for the University's operating budget and student support. A special, world-wide family endowment co-ordinating committee will implement the project. BY JAMES H. GORDON, OF NEW YORK, PRESIDENT OF UNITED WAS SERVICE

Murray I. Gurfein, President of United Hias Service, the worldwide Jewish migration agency, issued the following Pass-over statement:

The current exodus of Jewish persons from danger zones in many parts of the world demonstrates that the story of our people's survival through migration is as alive today as it was in Biblical times. For more than 200,000 Jewish men, women and children who fled their homelands last year, the age-old festival of liberation holds special significance.

Out of this sad and tragic out-pouring of frightened people seeking refuge came heightened requests for assistance on the part of our agency. Those who turned to United Hias Service in their time of distress received the help they required in order to bring to fruition their longing to resettle and to be reunited with loved ones in the United States, Canada, Australia, Brazil, and other countries of the Western world.

In trouble spots throughout the globe, our brothers continue to call upon us to heed their call for rescue. United Hias Service remains dedicated to its mission and, fortified by the coordinated activities of more than 350 Jewish welfare organizations, committees and cooperating communities all over the world, will do everything in its power to resettle these innocent victims of our troubled times in lands where freedom reigns.

BY EMIL M. BAAR, CHAIRMAN, BOARD OF TRUSTEES, OF THE UNION OF AMERICAN HEBREW CONGREGATIONS

The retelling of the Exodus from Egypt, so central to the observance of the great Jewish festival of Passover, is more, much more, than an account of physical freedom. It is the account whereby the Jew continuously reaffirms his belief that God is not indifferent or insensitive to His world and His people. The message of Passover is the message that God operates in and through history. It is essentially a message of hope. What happens to us in this world is not a cycle of events ending in a cypher. Man is not an expendable cog in a cosmic machine. Man is a meaningful, sacred entity. He braces futility and to accept an outlook of despairing resignation. This year, the coincidence of Passover and Easter takes added meaning. This is an Ecumenical year, when men of varying faiths and creeds have, for perhaps the first time, extended the hand of friendship and understanding across religious lines. While Easter and Passover are different from one another, together they are the celebration of life's renewing value and the need for the reaffirmation of life's redemptive capacity. Both call for the resurrection of the world's great desire for peace; both see in the liberating spirit of

Just as there is purpose, plan, and order in our physical evolution, so too is there a purpose and plan to our mental and moral evolution. Man and God are partners in the constant renewal of their mutual world. No idea is more needed than this one in a world where so many are so quick to em-

BY HARRY BALFORD BRICKNER, DIRECTOR OF INTER-FAITH ACTIVITIES, OF THE UNION OF AMERICAN HEBREW CONGREGATIONS

The word "Easter" is from "æstre," the Teutonic Goddess of Spring. Originally, the name was given to the 14th day of Nisan as the date of the crucifixion of Jesus, followed by a memorial of resurrection on the following Sunday. At first the dates of the two holidays were the same. Eventually, an attempt was made to split Easter from its Jewish origins, sover remained connected with a lunar (moon) calendar.

The Council of Nicea in the year 325 of the Common Era, decreed that the Christian Passover should be celebrated on the first Sunday following the first moon of the Vernal Equinox. This is why they often come together as in the case this year. (1963)

Both Passover and Easter are

In Rome it was decreed that the holiday could not be observed on the 14th day of a Hebrew month. This led to a split of the Eastern and Western churches. The West (Rome) dated Easter from the Spring Equinox of March 21. The East then became dated from a spring (not) calendar, with Pas-

The World Jewish Congress has called upon its affiliated communities and organizations in sixty-five countries to participate actively in the World Freedom from Hunger Week proclaimed by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, emphasizing the "special relevance" of the appeal in view of the traditional Passover welcome, "Let all who are hungry come and eat."

The appeal to the WJC's affiliates all over the world was issued by Dr. Maurice L. Perlmweig, Permanent Representative of the Congress at the United Nations, who said:

Half the population of the world suffers from hunger. At a time when the more affluent nations are expending untold millions on the storage of surplus food or on efforts to prevent its production, this terrible situation is not only an affront to every decent sentiment of human solidarity but is a grave threat to the structure of international relations. An international community, half starving and half fed, cannot long endure in its present form. Every consideration of morality and of practical wisdom warns us that it ought not to endure.

We shall either exert every effort to bring succor to those who need it, or we shall in due course learn that mass hunger is the seedplot of desperation and violence.

The Food and Agriculture Organisation has provided invaluable leadership in drawing attention to the desperate need to ameliorate this situation, and everyone who cherishes the UN ideal of the dignity of the human person will feel under a solemn obligation to rally to its support.

As Jews whose people have endured and survived the miseries and deprivation of ghettos and mellahs through all the vicissitudes of a long and troubled history, we feel under a special obligation to come to the rescue of those who are in need. Above all, as the heirs and successors of the prophets and teachers who gave to mankind a new insight into the inalienable rights of the human personality, we have a special contribution to make. We are confident that Jewish communities everywhere, and Jews working in cooperation with men of all races and creeds, will answer the call which has come from the leadership of the world community.

It is an old and honoured tradition that in every Jewish household on the eve of Passover the doors are thrown open and all who are in want are invited to participate in the Passover Feast: 'Let all who are hungry come and eat'. This ancient summons to human brotherhood, though preserved in an Aramaic which has long left the lips of men, still lives in our hearts. It speaks to us with a special relevance as we approach the Passover.

It is not a mere coincidence that these words are spoken on the Feast of Freedom. Food and freedom are the essential prerequisites if man is to achieve emancipation from the burdens which oppress him.

the freedom of man from the world; Passover, the freeing of man in and for the world. Both deal with the miraculous.

In Passover the miracle is the crossing of the Red Sea (this is no misspelling); Easter commemorates the miracle of resurrection.

However, in Passover, the miracle of the crossing of the Sea is secondary to the idea of freedom. In Easter, the miracle is of primary significance. In all commemorations and miracles, the danger is that people wait too much for a miracle to happen. In reality, miracles occur only when we stop waiting for them to occur.

Both of these holidays have a rest message: Hopeful man; the resurrection of a spirit and a people, both come in the spring when the message of life revivifies and sets.

Jacob Blochman, of New York, speaking, called for a vote on the Jewish community rally, on the 20th anniversary of the Russian Revolution. It was held on April 19, at 8:30 p.m., at the Metropolitan and Jewish Synagogue, Manhattan. Mr. Blochman has written several books of poetry and several novels, some of which have been translated into other languages. He visited a two-weeks' vacation in the Jewish State of Palestine, and is editor of Yiddish magazine, Der Eretz. A statement of the rally was read from his work. Percy Meyer will speak on "Anti-Semitism Today." David Greenbaum and Gustav Schindler Gieser will conduct the musical part of the program and the Russian part will consist of songs of the six million Jews who were killed in the Holocaust. A review of the Yiddish Earth will play, directed by L. Burke. Lucy M. Zucker, representative of the Yiddish People's Front, will preside. The citywide Jewish community rally to mark the 20th anniversary of the Russian Revolution will, at the same time, pay tribute to the millions of Jews who were killed through Nazi oppression. The meeting is sponsored by Communist Jewish groups, the Jewish Zionist Movement, Jewish Labor Committee, Federation of Labor Jews, and the Association of Former Concentration Camp Inmates. Samuel Hurwitz is chairman of the Musical Committee. There will be a joint tribute by about 1,000 choral singing Jewish, gay, catholic and orthodox choirs, arranged by the Council of the Jewish Educational Institutions of America.

Montreal, at Shraga Eliza Congregation Synagogue, at 4:15 p.m., on April 19.
